April 20, 2020 -- Odds are you have a lot more free time if you're self-isolating. So why not make the most of it and learn a new hobby? These companies and organizations are offering free services during the coronavirus pandemic:

Keep your brain sharp by taking a course from Harvard, Princeton, Yale, or other universities -- no acceptance letter required. All eight Ivy League schools are offering free online classes in a wide variety of subjects, according to Class Central. Browse the course list and enroll here.

Just because you're stuck inside doesn't mean you can't get a great workout in. Peloton is offering a free 90-day subscription to its at-home exercise app. Similarly, Gold's Gym is offering free, unlimited access to the workouts on its app through the end of May.

Fender is offering 3 free months of online guitar, bass, and ukulele lessons. "We're all going to be spending more time inside -- so we might as well make some noise," the company announced on its website. Click here to sign up.

Develop a deeper appreciation for fine art with the help of The Museum of Modern Art. It's offering free online courses that will help you understand everything from contemporary pieces to fashion and design, according to its website.

And learn how to snap the perfect picture with online classes from Nikon. The company will let you take its photography classes free of charge through April 30. Click here to start learning.
